AJ Gentile, CEO of the 2083 Group was elected as a director to Mojave Jane's board at its recent annual general meeting. This investment marks the achievement of an important milestone for Mojave Jane by providing a vital element of the Company's strategy to produce high value consumer brands and deliver them to the California market.

In addition to Mojave Jane acquiring an interest in the 2083 Group, the parties have also established a strategic partnership that includes:

- Access to consumer purchase and market data that will provide a unique understanding of consumer demands and buying habits through Speedweed's growing database of purchases made in the California market;
- Development of Mojave Jane products and brands to match consumer preferences in real time;
- Delivery of those products right to the consumer via the Speedweed delivery platform;

Gary Latham, CEO of Mojave Jane, comments:

"Our partnership with 2083 represents an important part of Mojave Jane's strategy in California and as we are looking to expand into new markets across the state. Closing this investment means that we can begin to realize the benefits of all of 2083 Group's assets, including direct-to-consumer-delivery, rapid introduction of Mojave Jane brands and products to an existing and growing consumer base, and a host of promotional capabilities. Gaining access to delivery is the final piece in owning the entire cannabis supply chain, and we are now very well positioned for generating revenue and creating value for our investors.

A.J. Gentile, CEO of 2083 Group, added:

"Two words: game changer. That's what our partnership with Mojave Jane is. It provides us with the capital we need to continue the expansion of SpeedWeed's on-demand home-delivery platform in California with leading brands and retailers. With a database of over 250,000 customers and growing, we see consumer trends as they happen. What's exciting is the ability to marry our data with Mojave Jane's manufacturing and distribution capabilities. Now, we can bring to market the products our customers want — in near real-time. A true game changer!"
