At the Meeting, shareholders approved all matters put forward by management, including:

- The re-election of Emma Andrews, Sam Kassem, Fred Bonner, and Sherry Boodram as directors of the Company for the ensuing year; and
- The re-appointment of Davidson & Company LLP as the Company's auditor for the ensuing year, with remuneration to be determined by the board of directors.

The Company's board continues to reflect a balance of operational leadership and independent oversight, supporting disciplined governance and long-term value creation.

Industry Engagement and Advocacy

Nextleaf has joined the Cannabis Cultivators of British Columbia ("CCBC"), a leading provincial industry association representing Health Canada licence holders, including cultivators and processors. In addition to corporate membership, CEO Emma Andrews has been appointed to the CCBC Board of Directors and will contribute to a special committee focused on advancing opportunities for British Columbia-based operators in global cannabis markets.

Through its participation in CCBC, the Company supports collaborative dialogue with provincial stakeholders, including government and regulatory bodies, aimed at enabling sustainable growth and improving the competitiveness of BC's cannabis sector. Areas of focus include export development, regulatory alignment, and fostering a resilient, responsible supply chain.

"Nextleaf has always taken a long-term view of building a sustainable business within a highly regulated environment," said Emma Andrews, CEO of Nextleaf Solutions. "We see industry collaboration and thoughtful policy engagement as critical components of that work, particularly as Canadian operators look to participate more meaningfully in global markets."

With a focus on capital efficiency, scalable technology, and standardized cannabinoid ingredients,

Nextleaf continues to align its operations with evolving regulatory frameworks and demand for consistency, quality, and dose control.
