Various laws and regulations govern the payments industry in Canada and globally. Our payments services may be or become subject to regulation by other authorities, and the laws and regulations applicable to the payments industry in any given jurisdiction are always subject to interpretation and change.

We expect that new services and technologies applicable to the industries in which we operate will continue to emerge and evolve. Rapid and significant technological changes continue to confront the industries in which we operate, including developments in proximity payment devices, including contactless payments via NFC technology.

There can be no assurance that any new products or services we develop and offer to our customers will achieve significant commercial acceptance. Our ability to develop new products and services may be inhibited by industry-wide standards, payment card networks, existing and future laws and regulations, resistance to change from our customers, which includes our sellers and their buyers, or third parties' intellectual property rights.

The COVID-19 pandemic is having an effect on how people pay for goods and services. We have seen a drop off in in-store and in-dining payments, and we are also seeing the need and demand for mobile ordering and safe contact-free digital payments. We are helping businesses to adopt contactless payments such as payment by quick response codes or payment by taking a photo of a bill as a better way to serve their customers and provide a safe environment for their employees. We continue to monitor the evolving situation in these uncertain times and to adapt our business accordingly.
