Keevil Institute of Mining Engineering at the University of British Columbia.

Processing systems testing continued in Costa Rica where the Company's gravity concentration system proved effective in producing concentrate grading +500 grams per tonne of gold. The company currently has over 2.5 tonnes of concentrate inventoried.

In accordance with recommendations presented by the University of British Columbia a new ball mill and a new 6- Cell Denver Flotation Circuit, has been purchased and installed at the plant. This new equipment is designed to recover fine gold, which is not currently recovered by the gravity concentration. The UBC lab testing has identified this additional recovery as the primary value driver in the tailings material.

In keeping with the strategy of delivering operational cash flow to support organic growth, the Newlox team has continued to ramp-up a gold trading platform in Latin America whereby the company purchases gold from various sources in the field before reselling the metal through established networks.
