17. Discuss any trends which are likely to impact the Issuer including trends in the Issuer's market(s) or political/regulatory trends. The economic value of the Company's exploration and evaluation assets is dependent, among other factors, on the market price and the outlook for uranium and rare earth element metals ('REEs'). Uranium has been in oversupply for some time as downgraded material from the dismantling of nuclear warheads has supplied fuel for nuclear reactor electricity generation. This source of supply has largely come to an end. More recently, the tsunami in Japan resulted in the shut-down of all of its 48 nuclear reactors. Two Japanese reactors have been approved to re-enter service and are expected to do so in early 2015. Analysts anticipate 15 in total will re-enter service during 2015, followed by another 4 in 2016 and 12 in 2017. China has 21 new reactors under development or construction which should be increasing demand for uranium over the next few years.

The spot price improved to US$44 per pound in the third week of November, up from a low of $28 at the end of May. Analyst projections are that it will take a long-term contract price of $65 before new production would be justified, and it may take several years to reach that level.

China's production of REEs is no longer adequate to supply its own requirement of certain REEs. The developing shortage is expected to increase prices to a level which could make new mining projects economically viable over the next few years.

Appia's mineral resources at Elliot Lake, Ontario are among the world's largest and have a combined uranium and REEs content, recoverable in the same flotation process and subsequent recovery treatments.
