The state of the economy and capital markets may impact on the Issuer's ability to raise the funds necessary for exploration on the potash prospects held under lease (State) or option (Federal prospecting permits or permit application) or to exercise the option.

The potash market has certain significant structural and market challenges for new entrants. Good deposits that are economical to mine are rare and barriers to entering the industry are high. Significant upfront and continuing capital investment and at least seven years are required to bring a new mine to production. However, government involvement in and ownership of the industry are low. If the Issuer exercises the option and acquires the permits there is no assurance that the properties will contain an economically viable deposit or, if the properties do contain an economically viable deposit, that the Issuer will be able to raise sufficient capital to mine the deposit.

The viability and profitability of developing the properties will also depend on, among other factors, continued global demand and a favourable price for potash. Fluctuations in demand are characteristic of this market and there is no assurance that global demand will continue to increase or that potash prices will continue to be favourable.

In August 2013, the Russian potash producer OAO Uralkali ("Uralkali") announced its departure from the potash sales organization Belarusian Potash Co. ("BPC") established in 2005 with Belarusian potash producer JSC Belaruskali. The news of Uralkali's exit from BPC and the indicated intention to increase sales negatively impacted the global contract price for potash and initiated a period of heightened market volatility and reduction of confidence.

It is the Issuer's position that periodic fluctuations are to be expected and that the Green River Potash Project is strategically centred within the U.S. agricultural hub, a major global scale consumer of potash, that possess unique advantages and potential resilience to international volatility. Complementing this is the compelling attributes that the Project has indicated to date and the recent U.S. Federal project approval (positive prospecting permit determination) that has significantly altered the confidence level and underlying value.
